

Inside this issue

CCCSAA conference	2
GA conference	2
In n Out Burger	2
Laramie Project	3

Campus Events

- Finals Week: December 13th-16th... Good luck!
- Midnight Zone: The Duke's Place, written by Crafton Hills College student Jon Sterling, held a one-night-only performance on Friday, December 10th at Crafton Hills theatre.
- Psych club will be wrapping children's toys, donated by CHC students, on Saturday, December 11th.
- Campus will be close December 24th-31st; Spring classes begin January 18th, 2011!

The Advisor

Fall Semester

December 2010 Special Edition

You Betta WERK!!: Drag Show coming to Crafton Hills College in January '11

By Ericka Paddock
Director of Student Life

The Student Senate at Crafton Hills College is proud to announce that this year's Annual Event promises to be fierce and fabulous as the school's Finkelstein Performing Arts Center gets taken over by female impersonators well known in the Inland Empire.

The event, slated to occur at the end of January 2011, will pay homage to glamazons such as Madonna, Pink, Gwen Stefani and more.

Admission prices have been set at $5 for AS Card holders and SBCCD Administrators/Faculty/Staff, $7 for Other Students with a valid Student ID, and $10 General Admission. A portion of the proceeds raised that night will benefit the Foothill AIDS Project, an organization that provides comprehensive and specialized services to those affected and infected with HIV/AIDS in San Bernardino and Riverside counties.

For more information or to volunteer for this groundbreaking event, please contact the Department of Student Life at (909)389-3410.

Chegg kiosks to arrive in CHC bookstore

By Kaylee Hrisoulas
President, ASCHC

Since Fall 2009, I've seen an increasing number of students obtain their textbooks from the growing textbook rental website, Chegg.com. Starting Spring 2011, I anticipate that number of students to double when Chegg will begin partnership with our very own college bookstore.

Chegg, famous for their manifold, affordable textbook rentals and standard of planting a tree for every book rented, will offer discounts for Crafton and Valley students' textbook rentals. The bookstore will receive 12% commission if ordered through the new Chegg kiosk inside the store, or 8% commission if ordered online with a school code.

I'd like to encourage all students to take advantage of these wonderful textbook savings, like paying $65.00 for common algebra book rental versus $165.00 fully priced copy, and support your college bookstore simultaneously.

For more information, contact our college bookstore at (909) 389-3250 or visit <http://www.chegg.com/> to plan your semester savings!

Go Chegg!

CCCSAA Conference 2010: "A Call to Action"

By Katlin Bridge
Editor-in-Chief

On October 22nd, the Crafton Hills College (CHC) student senate (pictured) traveled to Costa Mesa to the California Community College Student Affairs Association Conference, more commonly referred to as CCCSAA.

That night, hundreds of attendees from all over Southern California were moved by keynote speaker Sharaud D. Moore (pictured), Freedom writer. He opened by saying, "If there were a recipe for failure, I had all the right ingredients." The audience learned that although life is full of trials, they alone are responsible for their outcomes and that education is one of the most powerful tools they can use to do so.

October 23rd and 24th were scheduled full of workshops to help the student senate members to work more cohesively and efficiently. CHC's Director of Student Life Erick Paddock held a well-received seminar regarding time management, humorously titled, "Chillin' with Father Time."

The participants of the conference also had the opportunity to learn and discuss media relations techniques, effective communication skills, and how famed children's author Dr. Seuss can help you find your leadership personality.

Want In n Out to come to Crafton?

By Leanne Perrault
Social Events Officer

Hey Crafton Students and Staff! How would you feel about having an In-n-Out Cookout Trailer come to our campus Spring of 2011?

Here's what we would do: First we, as the Student Senate of Crafton, would pre-sell tickets that would get you a hamburger or cheeseburger with chips and a drink. (Fries and shakes cannot be brought in the Cookout Trailer that comes to the location.) In other words, if you want the food you have to come to the Student Life office located by the café in order to receive any product. The catch is we, as the school, would have to promise to sell a certain amount of product for the Cookout Trailer to come to Crafton.

If you have any questions about the Cookout Trailer coming to the school, please contact Ericka Paddock at (909) 389-3410.

General Assembly Conference Fall 2010

By Chris Walsh
Vice President of External Affairs, ASCHC

Student Representation Fee... It's the fee that you see on your registration statement, and wonder to yourself, "What is that for?" Well the month of October is a prime example of that money in action.

The Associated Students of Crafton Hills College's Student Senate embarked on two conferences last month fully funded by the Student Representation Fee. The Student Senate for California Community College's (SSCCC) bi-annual General Assembly (GA) in San Diego, California, is one of those conferences. The SSCCC conference focused on creating more efficient student governments, while allowing student leaders the ability to vote on legislation that will be advocated in Sacramento.

Just like other conferences, GA was geared toward helping student leaders better serve their constituents, with workshops, break-out sessions, and keynote speakers that were extremely inspirational.

It is hard not to feel a renewed sense of self, and a stronger passion for serving the students of Crafton Hills College after attending a student leadership conference.

Protestors for gay rights support Laramie Project

By Manny Lopez
Guest Writer

Would the night be decorated with words often reserved by those filled with ignorance and its partner, hate? The whispers of a possible protest made way around campus grounds; tension lingered. It crept its way into those on campus as they questioned if these anti-gay protesters would appear during the production of The Laramie Project.

The campus prepared, bracing for the howl of the ignorant, then something wonderful took place. Not howls; instead, comforting messages from those who were willing to brave the chill, willing to voice their message of alliance. Carly Calbreath, of Yucaipa High school, attended the event with other local high school students. She humorously stated in response to the fringe-religious-lacking-in-attendance anti-gay protesters, "God hates protesters who don't show up." In their numbers, they were uncountable; together they formed a gathering of hope in the bleak. Watching each individual with their signs held securely, the lights glowing above them, one could not resist forgetting the feel of the cold on our hands, and the tension that once held her sway, as we all saw these pro-gay protesters arrive. The smiles of each hand-some individual gave off the message they were there to spread. Bright colored signs, rainbow flags in hand, one sign stood out in memory. "We were born this way." I, as well as others, were proud of the support.

Featured above are just a few of the home-made signs supporting gay rights that were held by members of surrounding communities at Saturday night's performance of The Laramie Project.

Left: The seats of the Finkelstein Performing Arts Center were full as the lights went down on the final evening of Laramie.

Contributors

Katlin Bridge	Editor-in-Chief
Mary Bridge	Staff Writer
Mandy Godard	Staff Writer
Kaylee Hrisoulas	President, ASCHC
Manny Lopez	Guest Writer
Ericka Paddock	Director of Student Life
Leanne Perrault	Social Events Officer
Chris Walsh	Vice President of External Affairs, ASCHC

Any upcoming events that you want included in the Events Calendar? Have any news stories for the Advisor? Want to be a

