Online Education Standards and Practices \(OESP\) course from @one

In Spring 2016, @one announced their newest course, Online Education Standards and Practices (OESP). This fast-paced, 12-week combines the best of @ONE's courses with targeted Canvas tutorials, providing an excellent overview of developing and teaching an online course using Canvas. Participants who complete OESP receive an @ONE Online Teaching Certificate of Completion, and participants who go on to have their OESP ePortfolio reviewed are eligible for the @ONE Online Teaching Certificate of Achievement..

Does the ETC want to recommend this course as an alternative certification option?

Online Course Caps – Item Continued from Sept 27 agenda	What recommendation would the ETC like to forward to the Academic Senate in regards to caps? Sept 3, 2008 - ETC will need to make a recommendation about caps for online - look at best number for effective teaching. Sept 17, 2008 - Looking at a productivity measure of 525 - 35 students in an 18 week class. Will need to look at what are reasonable caps for online classes. Cap of 25 for online classes, at least for the first time, is based on research about best practices for online. We need to look at suggested caps for second time around. We want to maintain quality. Goal is also retention. Online classes need to have instructor presence to help with this. There is actually quite a lot of individual instruction in online classes. Feb 3, 2010 - Discussion on caps in online, retention is an issue - need to avoid blanket statements - should have some way of letting faculty have input on numbers they know the class best.
